

An Australian Hospital at the Front

Mr. Kennedy, of London, England, has been on active service in the front since August, and while he was engaged in the war, he was sent to a friend here to establish the following account of the establishment and working of an Australian military hospital there.

The whole installation of the hospital shows signs of this businesslike, efficient disposition, complete, with that pleasant genuineness of the Colonial. Here is a new spirit which pervades the whole of the hospital without the necessity of removing the spirit; there is a simple earnestness for the extension of a brand of arm. "If you haven't got a wound, it's not the end of the world, and in war surgery so many unusual situations arise that the facility in the treatment of the wounded is of great importance."

BECOMING DRESSES for the OVERGROWN GIRL

Velvet Jerkin Dress

The Long Waisted Tunic, Tuck at Waist

Charmeuse with Plenty of Fullness

Plaid in Loose Line

Lace Bodice and Pleated Skirt

THE awkward age, when a little girl is not a child, nor a girl, and is growing all the time, is one of the most trying times for the mother who is to plan or buy dresses. It is certainly trying for the overgrown girl. If you have ever been in this class, you will understand; if you have a daughter who is very much ahead of the dresses that are marked at her age, look at these models and plan the outfit with the important facts well in mind.

First, there must always be freedom. The dress that fits snugly will soon be too tight. The growing girl should have plenty of room. Do not have the skirts too short nor too long. Try different lengths before the final stitching of the hem. Make the dresses a little more decorated than the dresses of children; and yet shun the overornate and fussy style. Aim at the happy medium in all things.

The jerkin dress of velvet is an excellent model. It has a bodice that hangs in straight lines over a satin under-bodice. A fold of velvet finishes the bottom and buttons at the sides form good decorations. The skirt is a double one, which cuts the height of an overbuilt girl. Any combination of cloth and silk will do.

Plaid sibiline is used in a practical model. It has a white pique collar and cuffs and a pointed belt of green. The skirt is circular, with the plaid on the diagonal. The sleeves are long.

A dark blue dress has a belt with points at the side, and it is bound with braid. The front is buttoned down under large buttons. Sleeves are elbow length, with deep cuffs of white. Flaps over the shoulders give freedom. A double skirt is shown.

The overgrown girl must have a dress for the best day and parties. It is shown here in an old-rose charmeuse, easy to copy and carrying a certain style in its lines. There are tucks at the shoulders and deep revers trim the front of the blouse. A vest of white fills in the top. Around the waist line is a soft silk girdle. The sleeves are half-length and have cuffs. The tuck of the skirt has a hem that suggests a binding.

Last in the group is a plaid dress with the skirt pleated. There are white revers and cuffs. The sleeves are long, and a belt defines the waist line. The front has a vest that shows at the top and bottom, and the sides are laced together, with the ends of the laces at the top for a change.

The prevailing smock styles are attractive and becoming, especially for the awkward age. There are so many varieties of the smock that any line can be secured; and by emphasizing one line another one can be counteracted in its effect. For instance, if the girl be inclined to stoutness, the vertical lines for trimming are the ones that will make her appear more slender. If she be tall and angular, the horizontal lines are right.

Freshness and whiteness are obtainable in the adjustable gimpes. Plain colors in neutral shades are best for the awkward child. They do not make defects conspicuous, and harmonize with all colors that may be used for trimming.

There is really no need of your daughter's looking awkward on account of her clothes. A special set of dresses will solve the question. Take as much care in the planning as you do for yourself. She needs it.

VOL. LVIII.
GREAT BRITISH GUNS OUTDO THE GERMANS
New Heavy Howitzers Are Dominating the War Zone.
Their Effect Is Appalling—The Enemy's Weakness Grows.

(The Eye-Witness.)
London, Feb. 12.—The British howitzer is now making headway, which have gained ascendancy over the heavy German guns.

On the battlefield south of La Bassée, a week ago tonight.

The heavy howitzers took part in the bombardment, their fire being directed on the railway triangle. The shells were audible to the eastward above the roar of the other artillery, while to the westward the shattering of shells through the air was most impressive, as were the volumes of smoke and debris thrown up. The effect of the hostile shells was truly terrific, our shells being heard to burst above the German lines, and as they burst among the brick stacks they created great clouds of smoke.

The assault was launched against a strong position of the Germans, which was held by the Germans. The German columns rushed the front from three sides at once and captured it with little loss, and as prisoners were taken, the German columns were surrounded by the British shells, which were so great and the clouds of dust, smoke and debris thrown up. The British shells were so great and the clouds of dust, smoke and debris thrown up.

Some of the prisoners captured lately were seen to be suffering from gas poisoning. In the pocket of a German soldier's uniform was found a small bottle of gas, which was found to be a small bottle of gas, which was found to be a small bottle of gas.

BRITISH AIR FLEET RAIDS GERMAN BASES

34 Planes Damage Positions in Towns in Belgium.

All Returned Safely—Germans Bombard Verdun.

London, Feb. 12.—Aerial warfare was waged to-day on the largest scale in its history, and under adverse circumstances from the standpoint of the weather. British aeroplanes, however, were in the air, swept over cities of Northern Belgium held by the Germans and dropped bombs on Ostend, Bruges and other places. Twenty-four aeroplanes and a machine of the British army took part in the operations, and all of them later returned safely to their base without casualties to their drivers, although two of the machines were damaged. The raid was made in order to prevent the development of submarine bases and establishments which might further endanger British warships and merchantmen.

Although no submarines were seen, the British Admiralty statement indicates that the raid had satisfactory results. For considerable damage is said to have been done to German gun positions. Railway lines had been cut, and the damage done to them has not been ascertained.

At various points the aeroplanes were met by the German army. None of the aeroplanes were reported to be damaged. The German army, however, was reported to have been damaged by the British aeroplanes.

One of the machines, driven by Flight Commander Claude Grahame-White, was reported to have been damaged by the German army. The machine was reported to have been damaged by the German army.
